THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

Thank you for writing. After 2 years of negotiations, the United States—together with our international partners—has achieved what decades of animosity has not: a comprehensive, long-term deal that will verifiably prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon. This deal shows that American leadership and diplomacy can bring real and meaningful change that makes our country and our world safer and more secure. We negotiated from a position of strength and principle, and the result is a nuclear deal that cuts off every pathway to a nuclear weapon. I want to make sure you know what this deal means and how it works.

Under this deal, Iran will not be able to produce highly enriched uranium or weapons-grade plutonium—the raw materials necessary to build a bomb. Iran will reduce its stockpile of enriched uranium by 98 percent and remove two-thirds of its installed centrifuges—the machines necessary to produce highly enriched uranium—and store them under constant international supervision. To put that in perspective, Iran currently has a uranium stockpile that could produce up to 10 nuclear weapons, and that stockpile will be reduced to a fraction of what would be required for a single weapon. Additionally, Iran will modify its nuclear reactor in Arak so it cannot produce weapons-grade plutonium, and all spent fuel from the reactor will be shipped out of the country indefinitely.

This deal is not built on trust; it's built on verification. For the first time, we will be in a position to verify that Iran is meeting all of these commitments. International nuclear inspectors will have access to Iran's nuclear program where and when necessary. This is the most comprehensive and intrusive verification regime we have ever negotiated. If Iran tries to divert raw materials to covert facilities, inspectors will be able to access any suspicious locations. As Iran implements this deal, it will receive gradual relief from sanctions, and if it violates any aspect of this agreement, sanctions that have crippled Iran's economy will snap back into place.

That's the deal. It has the full backing of the international community. Without it, there would be no agreed-upon limitations on Iran's nuclear program, and other countries would feel more compelled to pursue their own programs—threatening a nuclear arms race in the most volatile region of the world. Put simply, no deal means a greater chance of more war in the Middle East. That is why it would be irresponsible to walk away from this deal. Moving forward, I welcome a robust debate in Congress on the details of this agreement. As Commander-in-Chief, I am confident that this deal will meet the national security interests of the United States and our allies, so I will veto any legislation that prevents its successful implementation.

Our differences with Iran are real, and the difficult history between our nations cannot be ignored—but it is possible to change. The path of violence and rigid ideology—a foreign policy based on threats to attack neighbors or eradicate Israel—is a dead end. A different path of tolerance and peaceful resolution of conflict leads to more integration into the global economy, more engagement with the international community, and the ability of the Iranian people to prosper and thrive. This deal offers an opportunity to move in a new direction, and we should seize it.

Again, thank you for writing. To learn more about this historic deal and how it will make the United States, our allies, and our world safer, please visit www.WhiteHouse.gov/Iran-Deal.

Sincerely,

Barack Obama

Mr. Obama,

Thank you for your [uninspired] response. However, concerning the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (a.k.a. Iran Nuclear Deal), you must get an addendum in which specifically calls for a) known terrorists on the Blocked Persons or Foreign Invaders lists to be subject to notification, movement restriction and detention by any country of concern, b) arms and nuclear facility inspection to be made by an international contingent available within 24 hours, and, c) arms and nuclear materials and products to be subject to restriction of sales with ending transaction to terrorist groups. In addition, the authority of the US government has been revoked by the people through constitutional process and you do not have permission to operate or authorize such deal without permission, as has been posted by public notice in both City Weekly and Beverly Hills Weekly (7/23-29 Beverly Hills Weekly: <http://bhweekly.com> [Issue 825, Pg 14]; 7/30 City Weekly: <http://e.cityweekly.net/cityweekly#2015/07/30/?article=2568897> [Pg 63]).
